The sixth-century voyage of St. Brendan to North America is the most fascinating of sea legends. Could the myth, of an Irish monk and his crew sailing across the Atlantic in a boat made of leather, nearly a thousand years before Columbus, have been reality?

In pursuit of a legend, Tim Severin staked the lives of himself and his four companions on following the exact methods used by the seafaring Irish monks in constructing and sailing their vessel. Persuasive proof of the validity of the Brendan myth, Severin's hazardous expedition remains a supreme testament to the resilience of the voyaging spirit in some of the most hostile conditions known to man. This is the inspiring story of that epic journey.

"One of the great sea-going adventure stories of modern times"

SUNDAY TIMES

The CD

The Brendan Voyage music is a suite for orchestra and Irish (Uilleann) Pipes played by soloist Liam O'Flynn, composed by Shaun Davey, and based on the book by Tim Severin. The pipes represent the boat and carry the listener before the wind, through ferocious gales, over gigantic waves, through floating pillars of ice...evoking the journey from a small Kerry harbour to the Faroes, the cliffs of Mykines, to Iceland, the freezing waters of Labrador and finally, to safe harbour in Newfoundland.

"Enthralling, momentous music, the Brendan Voyage is a tremendously moving, even awesome piece of music to hear performed live."

BELFAST TELEGRAPH

"It isn't every day that an Uilleann Piper gets a standing ovation in London's Festival Hall, so the fifteen minute standing ovation was a rare occurrence indeed."
